Coping strategies journal

Introduction

On this page you can keep track of your own coping responses to challenging situations. Use this when you realize you are feeling stressed, anxious, sad, feeling depressed, angry or frustrated. Or if any other emotion shows up that is uncomfortable for you and that pulls you away from the present moment and away from what you are trying to do right now.
You can carry this journal with you and use 'in the moment', or you can use it as a reflection moment to look back on your day or week and learn from. When you describe what happened, try to do so in a 'neutral way', like an outside observer would do. When you consider the effectiveness of the strategy, use the anchors where 1 = it is not effective at all, not even in the slightest and $10=$ it is extremely effective.

| What happened? What caused you to  feel a certain way? | What strategy did you use to navigate  that difficult emotion? | In the short run,  how effective is the  strategy on a scale  of 1-10? | In the long run, how  effective is the  strategy on a scale  of 1-10? |  |

| I had a long list of to-dos and was  worried I would not be able to finish it  all | Because I felt overwhelmed, I  procrastinated. In the end I got a few  anything you of  might do  differently next  time? |  |  |  |
|  |  | 6.  Because it did help a  little, but the list was  still very long. | 3.  Because I will still  need to do the tasks. | I could try to set  priorities and take  frequent breaks. |
